-A colored waiter in Hartford, Conn., who had been "gtruck" with the draft, hired a lame darkey friend to personate him before the ersmining board, with a view to exemption. The leg was not unsound enough, the surgeon "passed" the bogus conscript, and he was held as a warrior. He turned pale with four, and divulged the cheet; the result was, both substitute and principal were locked up.

DRAFT ITEMS.—The draft authorities in some of the New England towns are raising quite a breeze of indignation by publishing, opposite the names of "exempts," the nature of the disease [L.5.] by which they escaped the draft. Pet skeletone. which their owners would gladly have kept concoaled in their closets, even at the price of a substitute, are being uncerthed on all sides. An apalling amount of physical deformity has been brought to light among the sturdy New Englanders.

-In Scio, Alleghany county, N. Y., the other day. Benjamin Johnson, a colored man, was drafted, and presented a white substitute, who was accepted and aworn in.

FROM THE SOUTH .- A soldier of Vicksburg, now resting on his laurels and living on the fat of the land at Natchez, writes home to his friends thus: "This is a much bealthier place than Vicksburg. We are camped in a heautiful park with gas lights all around us and in the walks, and fine shade trees. My tent is under a large magnolia, and the procest private we have sleeps under a rose bush. There is every kind of tropical fruit in abundance, and some I never saw before. Niggers bring us every morning melons of more varieties than I ever thought it possible to grow, and ripe, rich figs, peaches, apples, pemegranates, and a fruit which they call nectarine—a cross between the plum and the peach and very fine eating; and then we have every kind of veretable imaginable. We are getting oranges and lemons from New Orleans and plenty of ice -a great luxury."

-The oil trade of Cleveland, Ohio, has attained great importance. Those engaged in it talk of establishing an "oil line" of veccels between that port and Europe.
